

Nancy C. Cychol is Executive Vice President of Hospital Services for Cook Children's in Fort Worth, Texas, one of the largest children's hospitals in the country. After joining Cook Children's in 1984, Cychol held several leadership positions. Before joining Cook Children's, she was employed by Riley Hospital for Children in Indianapolis, Indiana and Children's Medical Center of Dayton in Dayton, Ohio.

As Executive Vice President, Cychol oversees operations of the 462-bed medical center in Fort Worth and a newly opened medical center in Prosper, Texas. She is responsible for more than 6,000 employees across over 38 specialties and subspecialties. This includes a nationally respected Magnet® designated nursing staff ranked in the top three percent of all healthcare organizations nationwide. She directs a highly-skilled staff of nurses, technologists, therapists, child life specialists, chaplains, teachers, social workers, translators, and more than 800 physicians/dentists, and over 400 advanced practice providers.

Under her leadership, Cook Children's has become the home of a designated Level II pediatric trauma center, a Level IV neonatal intensive care unit, and one of the largest pediatric transport programs in the country.

Cychol received her bachelor's and master's degrees in nursing/administration from Indiana University.

Cychol currently serves on the boards of the Cook Children's Surgery Center/Hurst, Cook Children's Surgery Center/Prosper, LifeGift (an organ donation organization), and MedStar Mobile Healthcare.

Cychol and her husband John, who live in Colleyville, have two sons, Ryan and Nicholas. Their son John IV is deceased.
